3. Backstory:

Mono was born from the combined ashes of the suicide god and his human lover that drifted into the sea. As a child, he was found by a crocodile who rode him to the shores of a village where he would be taken in and raised until finally running off on his own at 13.

- He was his village's cloth mender, but he hated it and preferred to be a warrior. The chiefs didn't want him to though because they know about his strange powers and feared that it would cause the other villages unrest.
- He was always getting into trouble as a kid. The villagers had to literally tie him down to keep him out of trouble.

Character Notes:

- He is a demigod, he has so much energy that his hair grows rapidly (he also heals fast and such). He doesn't even realize how much power he has, but everyone else sees it obviously.
- Rouge God is a term used for any being with a higher power operating outside of an African God's laws. There are 5 major gods and they all control their own territories on the Savanna Moon. Each has their own system, rules, and so on, but are in alliance with each other (kind of) similar to how nations can be in alliance, but also self-serving. Mono is born from the 6th God (who was destroyed for falling in love with a human) so that territory is in dispute between the other 5 gods.
- Mono will bridge the gap between the humans and the gods as a consequence of the Nakama he acquires and the deeds they overcome. The gods will end up having to adjust (in a humorously uncomfortable way) to the balance of power between the humans and the gods.
