1. Introduction

Story Role: Secondary Character

Bio: The amiable and easy-going leader of the Enos Thief Tribe, Ado is renown by his comrades for his ability to motivate and inspire. Under Ado's leadership, the Enos Tribe has consistently surmounted seemingly impossible challenges and grown to become the second largest thief organizations on Tanu, attesting to his great skill.

Controlling a rare God Arm and having a knack for thinking on his feet, Ado is out to defeat the legendary Glass Bandit of Tanu; an élan thief who heads the largest guild on the island and who is also responsible for the death of Ado's people and destruction of their village many years ago.

While Ado tends to be overly familiar and kind to most, his cheerfulness belies his true state of depression, tied to the many buried memories of his past. When Shale comes on the scene however, Ado becomes convinced that with Luos' power and his own brilliant strategies, that they can take down Glass Bandit and avenge his people once and for all.

3. Backstory

Synopsis:

Ado's life has been marred with change. When he was 7, his community leader was nearly assassinated over a land dispute with the government and their people were forced to move to the dying forest lands of Afayii Akayly to live a life of poverty. Having hardly any resources to survive from, the community quickly resorted to stealing élan's from passing thieves in order to get the strength they needed to work in nearby cities and earn the village money.

Ado's life gained relative stability as more and more villagers began to work and funnel money back into their community. Ado worked and had many friends whom he partnered with to get jobs done. His best friend, Kahara, was his #1 partner and they enjoyed many adventures together. They eventually developed feelings for each other and as the village continued to grow, it seemed as if they had a promising future together.

However, when Ado was 15, the legendary Glass Bandit Guild descended upon their community, kidnapping the women, enslaving the young men, and burning the village to the ground, killing their leaders in one fell swoop. Ado and a handful of other villagers managed to survive and escape. Staring at the burnt ashes of the home they struggled so hard to create, they swore to track down the guild, liberate their captives, and avenge their fallen people.

Years passed and after finding the Glass Bandit and his guild on Tanu, Ado was shocked to discover many of their own people had allied with the fiend, including Ado's much beloved Kahara, who was acting as second in command of the guild. Determined and enraged as ever to seek revenge against the Glass Bandit, Ado has organized and grown his own thief tribe from the remaining members of his village—The Enos. He now seeks to overpower the Glass Bandit and taking reparations from the ones who betrayed them, especially Kahara.
